> The more one gets to know Mr. Wrigh the more remarkable he appears. He is the most unpretentious man alive, despit the fact that he carries about with him a secret which the world has been yearning to learn since the dawn of history. Yet as he talks, the conviction steals over the listener that he knows all about the subject of flight, and that, either by studying along other lines than those adopted by aviators in Europe or by intuition, he ha placed himself in a position to surmount all the immediate difficulties which present themselves when flight by mechanical means is attempted.

He is not in the least boastful nor inclined to indulge in "bluff," as his detractors are constantly endeavoring to maintain, and inforder to learn anything at all about his methods and plans he has to be pumped with considerable vigor.

His habits are simple. He does not smoke, drink or take coffee and says he has endeavored to train himself to do Plans for Marriage to Mme. Gould without what many people consider neces-

"The wind, one might say, is everything in flying, and for a very large part I have been concerned with the problem of securing balance in the wind. There is hardly such a thing as a steady wind. Fluctuations which are scarcely feit on the ground become of considerable moment a little higher up, and if strong enough the aviator quickly knows about it, unless the machine is designed to combat the effect.

"My impression is that after a greated of practice with one of our machines trips could be made in exceedingly strong winds.

For the convenience of Americans travelling in Europe whose movements cannot usually be timed so closely as to allow their friends at home to readily communicate with them by cable or letter the Paris office of the Herald has established a bureau for the receipt of such communications.

Cablegrams and mail may be addressed to travellers abroad in care of the Herald's Paris office, No. 49 Avenue de l'Opera. The Herald's European edition will publish each day an alphabetical list of those whose letters and cables have been confided to its care, so that wherever they may be they can request communications to be forwarded, or, if in Paris, call at the Herald office and obtain their mail.
